

Supporting International Postgraduate Research Students

Gerry Mullins

This workshop is designed to help you develop effective strategies for helping international postgraduate research students in your university. What we will do is spend the time discussing:

- What are the issues?
- What strategies are available?
- What might you do in your university?

Program:

- Introduction
- What are the issues? Where should our focus be on supporting postgraduate students? Where do students need support at academic, administrative, social &/or personal levels? To what extent are their needs the same as or different from local students? To what extent are the needs of coursework and research students the same?
- What do we know works – at least in some universities or for some students? What do we know doesn't work? What hasn't been tried?
- What can you do in your university to support international postgraduate students? Is this at the level of policy or practice? What are the long-term vs immediate strategies? What are the resource implications?
